THE MONEY ORDER FUND.

Postmaster Phillips, of Cutler, Charged with Making Inroads on It.

Postoffice Inspector Fletcher returned yesterday from Cutler, the little town in Carro'l county made famous as the birthplace of Andrew Jackson, the member of the Assembly of 1895, who made holy war on the Hon. Mike Cain's barrel of booze in the basement of the Statehouse. At the town of Cutler George M. Phillips, by virtue of long and faithful service in the interest of the Democratic party, was appointed to enjoy the honors and emoluments attaching to the office of postmaster on Sept. 7 last year. The honors are not so great as to make a man stooped-shouldered carrying them, and the emoluments alowed by law, being a percentage on the sale of stamps, amount to only about $200 a year, but Mr. Phillips went to work with great diligence to increase these emoluments, it is claimed by the government, and during the brief seven months that he has been in office he has succeeded in getting away with $900 out of the moneyorder fund. Inspector Fletcher worked with him a few days and succeeded in naking arrangements for full restitution to the government of the missing money. The government was amply secured by his bond. He will be given a hearing on the charge of embezzlement before Commissioner Falk, at Logansport, to-morrow. Though he is not under arrest, he is under sureveillance. A deputy marshal will go to Cutler to-night to conduct him to Logans-Death from a High-Chair Fall. GREAT CROWD TURNS OUT TO MEET THE FUNERAL TRAIN.

Last Services to Be Held at 2 o'Clock To-Morrow-Reminiscences of the Dead Countryman.

Viewed by thousands of his friends, rich and poor alike, the body of ex-Senator Voorhees lay in state yesterday afternoon in the Capitol building. It was an impressive spectacle to witness the long line of those who called to take their last look at him whom in life they honored filing through the long corridor with halting been made to produce the effect of grandeur and solemnity. The coffin, flower laden and flag covered, was placed in the center of the rotunda, where the people in double column filed past. One walking there might have fancied himself in Westminster Abbey, where music makes such a glorious requiem for the dead who lie there. As the long lines of people moved slowly along their ears were greeted with the of music which reverberated down the long corridors and among the dark draped columns in sad melodious waves. Some thought, indeed, a pipe organ was the origin of the sound, but it was produced by the Indianapolis Military Band stationed in the gallery of the south corridor. The music played was dirgelike and solemn, the only kind that sounds well in the Statehouse, and was admirably in ac-Spring! | cord with the occasion. "Cathedrallike" was the expression on many lips as they listened to the melody, and of a truth it

The train which brought the funeral party from Washington was late, and the large crowd gathered at the Union Station to meet it had to wait some time. The train was scheduled to arrive at 11:40, but did not arrive until 12:15. It had been expected that the party would arrive over the Pennsylvania line, but the train that brought it was one of the Big Four, the change having been made at Cincinnati from the Chesapeake & Ohio. Though impatient, the crowd gathered at the east end of the station was an orderly one, and the squad of patrolmen stationed there by Superintendent Colbert had no trouble in Word had been sent to the Statehouse, where the reception committee met, that the train would not arrive till after noon, and the procession did not move to the station until shortly before 12 o'clock. Capt. Quigley and a platoon of police headed the olumn, immediately followed by the Indianapolis Military Band. Companies A and H, Second Regiment, I. N. G., came next, then the Gray Club, citizens' reception committee and escort committee, and last came Governor Mount, the state, city and county officers and the judges of the Supreme and Appellate courts. The train pulled in shortly after the arrival of the procession at the station. It was made up of ten coaches and a baggage car, the funeral party being in the next to the last car. The last coach was detached, leaving the rear door of the funeral car adjacent to Meridian street, though within the station. Governor Mount, Private Secretary Wilson, W. D. Bynum and others of the committee entered the car to greet the funeral party, which consisted of the three children of the late senator-two sons and a daughter, Mrs. Robert Boyd-and Senator John L. Wilson. With the Governor's party who entered the car was a delegation of citizens from Terre Haute composed of John E. Lamb, Judge Mack, W. R. McKeen, Spencer Ball, George Allen, Henry Six, A. J. Kelly, John Beggs, J. G. McNutt, A. D. Weeks, Daniel Fasig and B. N. Taylor. The hearse was waiting at Meridian treet and the coffin was at once carried to it by the special detail of police chosen to act as pallbearers. They were Patrolmen Hagerman, Kurtz, Butcher, Rinker, Rader and Jackson. The honorary pall-bearers, who walked beside the hearse going to and from the Capitol, were W. H. Armstrong, Frank B. Burke, J. G. Williams, J. W. Kern, Wm. E. English, John C. New, D. M. Ransdell and E. B. Martin-THE CORTEGE MOVES.

The coffin was cleared of the burden of flowers which covered it, they being left in the car, and as soon as it was placed in the hearse the procession started. The hearse was drawn by four black horses in their black nets and was covered with black cloth. The top was draped with an American flag falling in graceful folds from an urn. The procession, in the order in which it came, the hearse directly following the militia, moved to the Capitol. The route was north on Meridian to Washington and west to the south entrance of the Capitol. The streets were lined with people, many of whom stood with uncovered heads as the cortege passed.

Superintendent Colbert assumed charge of affairs at the Capitol and everything was arranged for the proper handling of the crowd. Through a column of militia and patrolmen drawn up on either side of the walk, the citizens' committee taking places against the building, Governor Mount escorted the relatives of the dead into the building and the procession fol-As the guard of sturdy policemen carried gallery above, sang in soft tones, "Nearer, my God, to Thee." As the choir concluded the family were led to the coffin with their immediate friends and then left the building. The members of the citizens' committee then were permitted to view the remains and the south doors were flung open to the crowd assembled on the lawn. The people were marshaled in double column and filed down the south corridor to the rotunda through a file of policemen and militia, who kept the column straight and allowed no boistering. At the bier the column parted, passing on both sides of the coffin, and each person gazed for an instant on the face of the dead statesman. From the time the doors were opened until o'clock, when they were closed, the stream of visitors was steady, there being not a moment when so much as six yards of the pathway was free from its quota of Without exception, the visitors seemed impressed with the solemnity of the occasion and many a hand, some of them begrimed with the result of toil, stole to tear-laden eyes to brush away the moist, The number of so-callled "common people" in the throng was noticeable, proving, many said, the dead man's hold upon the people. It is estimated that between fifteen and eighteen thousand people viewed the body, yesterday, and a large majority of them were laboring men. The Chinese element was out in force and a number of these took advantage of the opportunity to see how Indiana treats her honored dead. All the offices in the Statehouse were ordered closed by Governor Mount during the time the body was lying in state, and the employes grouped about the building witnessing the scene were much impressed. In the decorations nothing could have

The Governor Will Attend.

Governor Mount will go to Terre Haute to-morrow to attend the funeral of ex-Senator Voorhees. H. B. Shively, the Governor's opponent in the last campaign, will also go. THE FUNERAL ARRANGEMENTS. Definitely Fixed for 2 p. m. Thursday -Masons in Charge.

Special to the Indianapolis Journal. TERRE HAUTE, Ind., April 13.-The remains of ex-Senator Voorhees arrived here at 7 o'clock this evening and, although only the Bar Association, had been called to meet the train, there was a large crowd of citizens who joined the procession to the Terre Haute House, where there was another crowd. To-night the remains lay in state for an hour at the hotel and were viewed by as many as could conveniently pass through the large room in that time. To-morrow during the day and to-morrow evening further opportunity will be given to the home friends of the late senator to look on his face, which has a natural expression. The people who passed through the room to-night were of the class of citizens who knew him best as a public speaker, men and women from what are called the lower walks of life, and there was no mistaking the high regard in which they

Professor Bassett, of the faculty of De Pauw University, presented to the children of Mr. Voorhees a tribute from the faculty and students, in which it was said the faculty and students of De Pauw for many years had been proud of the man who graduated from the institution fifty years ago and on whom the degrees of A. M. and L.L. D. had been conferred. It was said that, however widely people may have differed with him on political questions. none ever questioned his integrity or sincerity. The cadet corps had been ordered out and the artillery platoon fired a salute of seventeen guns. This afternoon the members of the family yielded to the request of the Masons for a Masonic burial. At first the offer had been declined on the ground that Mr. Voorhees had not been an active Mason for many years, but so insistent were the Masons that consent was granted after leaving Indianapolis. The trustees of the First Methodist Church tendered the use of their church for the funeral services and it was thought the offer might be accepted for the reason that St. Stephen's Episcopal Church has a rather small auditorium, whereas that of the First Methodist is the largest in the city, but it is decided now that the services will be held in St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, which church Mr. Voorhees joined many years ago. Th hour of the services has been fixed at 2 o'clock Thursday. A telegram was received this evening from Charles Voorhees, the eldest son, who is on his way from Spokane, saying he will arrive here to-morrow night. The hour of the funeral was contingent on his presence. The City Council to-night took appropriate action and the departments of the city government will participate in the funeral procession. Al the uniform rank organizations of the city are to be invited to participate, as also other organizations. The pallbearers have not been selected, but they will be Masons who were especially close friends of Mr. Voorhees. Thursday morning there will be a meeting of the Bar Association, when it s expected a large number of members of the bar from other places will be present. Peter Voorhees, of Danville, Ill., a brother. and Daniel, his son, of Peoria, joined the senator's family here.

"TALL SYCAMORE" SOBRIQUET. This and Other Stories of Voorhees Heretofore Unpublished. Special to the Indianapolis Journal.

TERRE HAUTE, Ind., April 13.- "Senator Voorhees always said he could not trace the origin of the sobriquet, 'The Tall Syca- | ilton, George W. Powell. more of the Wabash," said ex-Congress- Hall Committee-Harry Weber, Charles S. man Lamb, who perhaps knew the senator's life story, as told by himself, better than any other man. "The senator could recall the time when the appellation came into general use. He admitted that in the beginning it was unpleasant to him, but that later on he accepted it as an honorable distinction. My own opinion," remarked Mr. Lamb, "is that a newspaper writer, no doubt the one to whom the Journal refers as having first used it in that paper, made the happy hit in the same manner as did D. H. Martin, Irri Gat Ors; S. E. Earp, Vi the Indianapolis editor last fall who named Chairman Gowdy 'Oom Jack.' There has been a long story that the origin of the sobriquet was with a Sullivan county man who presided at one of the meetings of the wonderful joint debate between Mr. Voorhees and Col. "Tom" Nelson when they were opposing candidates for Congress, in 1860. This chairman is said to have introduced Mr. Voorhees as "The Tall Sycamore of the Wabash," and the story is also that when it came Nelson's turn to speak he said the name was most appropriate, because he had observed that all sycamores were hollow. It may be that the Sullivan county man did use the sobriquet, having read it in the newspapers, and it is more than probable that if such use was made of it Nelson made some such comment as that with which he is credited in the story.

There are many stories of that campaign, some of which are authentic, but many of which both Mr. Voorhees and Mr. Nelson repudiated as being wholly imaginary. There was a great deal of practical joking on the trip over the district, much of which journeying was in a buggy. One of the stories is that Nelson caused Voorhees's issues between the different tickets at detention by a sheriff on a trumped-up Irvington. The Republicans Monday night hurrying on to the place where they were to engage in a joint debate that afternoon. told the big audience that Voorhees was afraid to keep his engagement. Throughout all their forty years of opposition, always more or less directly pitted against each other, there was a strong personal friendship. They were companions here and in Washington, where Colonel Nelson spent most of his winters after he had served as minister to Chili and to Mexico. This friendship continued without interruption until a year ago last fall.

An interview which Gath printed in New York attributed to Nelson some statements about Mr. Voorhees's personal affairs and about his morbid dread of heart disease at the time, but a few weeks later, on Nelson's return from New York, there was a scene in the corridor of the Terre Haute grant. "I tried several times to get away, fear-ing that I might be wearying him, but he insisted on my remaining, saying, 'Don't be in a hurry. "When finally I started to the door he said: 'Doctor, I must know how your matter is progressing.' When I had told him he said: 'Well, I wish it were in my power, and I would only be too glad to decide it in your favor.'

Mr. Lamb, commenting on this expression of Voorhees, said: "That is Voorhees all over. He meant it, too. He would like to do anything for any one and every one, It was this good will, proved by tireless efforts in behalf of all who sought his assistance, that made him friends everywhere. It did not alter or lessen his efforts if the man who asked him for help was not influential. Here at his home he was approachable on the street or in any place by the most humble and ordinary resident, and that fact has caused those in charge of the funeral arrangements some little concern. it is desired to make provision for the accommodation of strangers at the services, and it was suggested that cards of admission be issued, but instantly the idea was abandoned, for the reason that everywhere it would be said, "That is not like Dan

"The Holy Sepulcher" Lecture.

To the Editor of the Indianapolis Journal: You fall into error in your tribute to "The Tall Sycamore of the Wabash" when you say "if he had lived to deliver his lecture on 'The Holy Sepulchre' it would probably have attracted much attention." Senator Voorhees delivered that lecture in this city to an immense audience in Normal Hall. His audience was largely made up of those religiously inclined, yet not wholly so, but it was regarded by all as almost wonderful. It showed the deep religious sentiment of the man, which was ever uppermost in his heart and was the best and swer to Ingersollism that has been made With the redressing he had recently given that lecture, under the influence of his matchless eloquence, if he had entirely re-gained his health, it would have created a sensation in the lecture field. NEW YAKOOT TEMPLE.

A Unique Gathering to Be Held Here Friday Night.

Yakoot Temple, No. 70, Dramatic Order Knights of Khorassan, will be instituted at Tomlinson Hall Friday night "at 7 p. m. by the town clock," as the unique poster announcing the event puts it. The D. O. K. K. is not a side order of the Knights of Pythias, but membership in a lodge of the latter is necessary to membership in the former. A very elaborate banquet has been arranged for at the Denison Hotel in the evening. Much care and thought have been given to make the institution of Yakoot Temple an entertaining and successful affair. Over $700 has been expended for costumes and equipment for the occasion. Quite a number of men distinguished in this order are to be here for the occasion, among them John A. Hinsey, imperial prince, of Chicago; H. W. Belding, imperial secretary, of St. Louis; Col. James Owen, imperial nawab, Taj-Mahal Temple, of Evansville, and J. Arthur, imperial nawab Al Siha Temple, Goshen. A number of visitors will be present from Goshen, Evansville and Mario

In addition to resident members, Yakoot Temple has institutes in Terre Haute, Spencer, New Castle, Danville, Attica, Zionsville, Columbus, Lebanon, Acton, Irvington, Plainfield and Muncie. The territory of Indianapolis embraces the entire State, with the exception of about thirty counties, which are divided among the temples located at Evansville, Goshen and Marion. All the territory of the State has been covered, and no additional temples will be established in Indiana.

Following are those who will participate in the institution of Yakoot Temple: Executive Committee-Frank Bowers, W. J. Sparks, Charles C. Riley, S. E. Earp, C. J. Crane, Timothy Splann, James A. Ham-Barker, George H. Pendleton, W. H. Nick-

IRVINGTON POLITICS.

Tickets Nominated by Republicans and Independents.

The independents of Irvington put up a municipal ticket last night and nominated the "hero of Chickamauga," Samuel H. Smith, as marshal. One of the strong planks of the platform on which Mr. Smith will himself stand is that he never makes any arrests, but as the citizens say there is never any occasion for arrests at the classic suburb this plank will not be a grave issue in the approaching campaign. In fact, it is difficult to distinguish the declared themselves opposed to making improvements which the majority of resident property owners don't want, while the inlependents last night practically agreed to the same thing, declaring in their resolu tion, however, that Washington street should be improved from the city limits to Irvington. They also opposed politics in local municipal affairs. The full ticket nominated is as follows: Browning, druggist; Third district, W. H. Bowman, architect; Fifth district, A. M.

Judge Showalter, of Chicago, who will hear argument on the motion for a temporary restraining order to prevent the operation of the 3-cent street-railroad-fare law, telegraphed yesterday that he would not be here until to-morrow, and the hearing, which was to have been had in the Federal Court this morning, was therefore postponed until to-morrow.

If the motion is taken under advisement by the court it is probable that at least brief season of 3-cent car fares will be enjoyed, if the company carries out the policy laid down in the petition of its bondholders, for the new laws of the last session wil probably be proclaimed within two or three days. All the shipments to county clerks have been made, and Mr. Fesler has been supplied with the Marion county quota. It is, therefore, a question of but a day or two when the receipts from all county clerks will be in the hands of the secretary of state and the laws can be proclaimed by the Governor. The motion will be resisted by City Attorney Curtis for the city and Attorney General Ketcham on behalf of the
